

artificial intelligence (AI) tools such as ChatGPT and Google Bard that have been widely discussed by courts grappling with fictitious legal citations and reported by national news outlets.” (United States v. Hayes (E.D. Cal. 2025) 763 F.Supp.3d 1054, 1065 (Hayes).) And yet another noted a plaintiff’s “false citations” that “appear to be hallmarks of an artificial intelligence (‘AI’) tool,” observing that “[i]t is now well known that AI tools ‘hallucinate’ fake cases.” (Schoene v. Oregon Department of Human Services (D.Or., July 18, 2025, No. 3:23-cv-742-SI) 2025 WL 2021654 (Schoene); see also Hall v. Academy Charter School [“The appearance of hallucinated citations in briefs generated from AI is no longer in its nascent stage. Regrettably, the number and regularity with which courts have been faced with hallucinations in court filings continues to rise”].)

Noland, supra, 114 Cal. App. 5th at 444.

Regrettably, this is not an obscure phenomenon. It is a growing and pernicious problem.

The Noland court imposed monetary sanctions against the offending counsel to be paid to the court rather than to the opposing counsel because in that case the opposing counsel did not alert the court to the fabricated citations. Noland, supra, 114 Cal. App. 5th at 448. The court finds that approach to be appropriate here, for the same reason. The court had to spend unnecessary hours discovering and analyzing the false citations, and in additional analysis of the arguments regarding the demurrer. The court orders Counsel Dubin to pay the $1000 monetary sanction to the Superior Court within 30 days.

Counsel asks the court to limit its order to the imposition of monetary sanctions and points to his decades of discipline free practice as an attorney and his service in fiduciary roles. He asks that no referral be made to the State Bar.

Citation of falsified authority undermines the integrity of and threatens the foundation of the legal system. Canon 3D(2) provides:

Whenever a judge has personal knowledge, or concludes in a judicial decision, that a lawyer has committed misconduct or has violated any provision of the Rules of Professional Conduct, the judge shall take appropriate corrective action, which may include reporting the violation to the appropriate authority.

An attorney with years of discipline free practice of the law should be a shining example of integrity. As the court wrote in Kleveland v. Siegel & Wolensky, LLP (2013) 215 Cal. App. 4th, 534, 559, “It is critical to both the bench and the bar that we be able to rely on the honesty of counsel. The term “officer of the court,” with all the assumptions of honor and integrity that append to it, must not be allowed to lose its significance.” This court stands with its colleagues in Noland v. Land of the Free, L.P. (2025) 114 Cal. App. 5th 426, 449, in Schlichter v. Kennedy (2025) 116 Cal. App. 5th, 24, 34, and in People v. Alvarez (2025) 114 Cal. App. 5th 1115, 1119 (submission of non-existent authority in pleadings by a public defender), in making a referral to the State Bar under these circumstances. Pursuant to Business and Professions Code § 6086.7(a)(3), the clerk of the court is ordered to forward a copy of this opinion to the State Bar.

10. 9:00 AM CASE NUMBER: C25-02348
CASE NAME: TAMAR SAVAZIAN VS. HYUNDAI MOTOR AMERICA
*MOTION/PETITION TO COMPEL ARBITRATION
FILED BY: HYUNDAI MOTOR AMERICA
TENTATIVE RULING:

Defendant, Hyundai Motor America Corporation (“defendant” or “Hyundai”), moves the Court under both the California Arbitration Act (“CAA”) and the Federal Arbitration Act (“FAA”) to compel plaintiff to arbitrate the claims set forth in the complaint, and to stay this action pending the outcome of arbitration. Because Hyundai fails to establish an enforceable arbitration agreement exists between itself and plaintiff, the motion is denied, as discussed below.

I. Background

Plaintiff, Tamar H. Savazian, alleges that on November 11, 2022, plaintiff purchased a 2023 Hyundai Elantra. (Savazian Declaration in Support of Opposition, ¶13; Complaint, ¶18.) Plaintiff asserts that the vehicle was delivered with serious defects including, but not limited to electrical, structural, engine, emission, and suspension system defects. (Complaint, ¶10.) Plaintiff presented the vehicle for repairs on multiple occasions, but Hyundai was unable to conform the vehicle to the “applicable express warranty” after a reasonable number of repair attempts. (Complaint, ¶¶11-21, 35.) Plaintiff alleges the vehicle was not fit for its ordinary purpose because it was equipped with one or more defective systems or components. (Complaint, ¶46.) Plaintiff filed the present suit on August 18, 2025, alleging three causes of action under the Song-Beverly Act. In response, defendant filed this motion on December 4th.

Defendant’s motion invokes the arbitration provisions found in a purported “Owner's Handbook & Warranty Information” and in a “Connected Services Agreement Terms and Conditions.” In support of its motion, defendant provides three declarations: (1) a declaration from counsel, Jennah Feeley, who attaches plaintiff’s complaint and defendant’s demand for arbitration (Exhibits 1 and 2, respectively), (2) a declaration from Vijay Rao, Director of Connected Ops & Owner Apps/Web, for Hyundai Motor America, Inc., who attaches as Exhibit B the “Connected Services Agreement Terms and Conditions” (aka “CSA” or “TNCID”) as well as other documents he asserts are related to plaintiff’s purported agreement to the terms and conditions, and (3) a declaration from Anthony Goel, a “Manager, Executive Case Management” at Hyundai, who attaches the “Owner’s Handbook & Warranty Information.” Goel states he is “familiar with [Hyundai]’s business practices as they relate to Hyundai vehicles” and that it is Hyundai’s practice to place an Owner’s Handbook in the glovebox of every vehicle sold through an authorized Hyundai dealership. (Goel Decl., ¶¶5, 7.) Goel further states that “after conducting a reasonable search of [Hyundai]’s records pertaining to arbitration opt-outs, plaintiff did not opt out of the Arbitration Agreement.” (Goel Decl., ¶15.)

Plaintiff opposes the motion, arguing defendant fails to show an agreement to arbitrate, that certain evidence is inadmissible, that the CSA does not cover the claims alleged, and that the purported agreements are unconscionable. In support of the opposition, plaintiff provides a declaration, as well as a declaration from plaintiff’s counsel. Plaintiff purports not to recall being “personally provided with a copy” of the Owner’s Handbook, and states that no one informed plaintiff about any arbitration provisions in the Owner’s Handbook or being required to opt out within thirty days.

On reply, Hyundai argues that it has met its evidentiary burden to show an arbitration agreement, and that there is no merit to plaintiff's unconscionability defense. Hyundai also submits responses to plaintiff's evidentiary objections.

II. Evidentiary Matters

In support of the motion, Hyundai requests judicial notice of (1) plaintiffs' complaint, and (2) the "Hyundai 2023 Owner's Handbook and Warranty Information, Publication No. USAHYUNDAI-211025."

With respect to the complaint, the request is granted. With respect to the handbook, the request is denied. Hyundai does not state the purpose for its request. "Simply because information is on the Internet does not mean that it is not reasonably subject to dispute." (Huitt v. Southern California Gas Co. (2010) 188 Cal.App.4th 1586, 1605, fn. 10.) Further, it is not at all clear that someone who sought to find this document through typical channels of internet research (via Hyundai's website or a Google search, for example) would be capable of finding it.

Plaintiff requests judicial notice of federal regulations and legislative history concerning the Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act. The request does not appear to be relevant to any argument made in the opposition. Accordingly, the request is denied.

Plaintiff's objections to the evidence provided by defendant in support of the motion are ruled on as follows: "Objection No. 3" (to paragraph 7 in the Rao Declaration stating plaintiff enrolled their vehicle in Bluelink services) is sustained. "Objection No. 4" (a hearsay objection to the CSA) is overruled.

III. Standard

A written agreement to submit to arbitration an existing controversy or a controversy thereafter arising is valid, enforceable and irrevocable, save upon such grounds as exist for the revocation of any contract. (Code Civ. Proc., § 1281.) The party seeking arbitration bears the burden of proving the existence of an arbitration agreement. (Pinnacle Museum Tower Assn. v. Pinnacle Market Development (US), LLC, hereinafter "Pinnacle," (2012) 55 Cal.4th 223, 236.) In California, contract formation requires free and mutual consent communicated to each other. (Civ. Code, § 1565.) Mutual assent is determined under an objective standard applied to the outward manifestations or expressions of the parties. (Esparza v. Sand & Sea, Inc. (2016) 2 Cal.App.5th 781, 788.)

"[A] court, before granting a petition to compel arbitration, must determine the factual issue of 'the existence or validity of the arbitration agreement. In this way, a court's role, though limited, is critical. There is indeed a strong policy in favor of enforcing agreements to arbitrate, but there is no policy compelling persons to accept arbitration of controversies which they have not agreed to arbitrate and which no statute has made arbitrable.'" (Toal v. Tardif (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 1208, 1219-1220.)

Once the party seeking to compel arbitration has alleged the agreement exists, the opposing party bears the burden of producing evidence to challenge the authenticity of the agreement. (Gamboa v. Northeast Community Clinic (2021) 72 Cal.App.5th 158, 165.) The opposing party can do this in several ways. For example, the opposing party may testify under oath or declare under penalty of perjury that the party never saw or does not remember seeing the agreement, or that the party never signed or does not remember signing the agreement. (Ibid.) If the opposing party meets its burden of producing evidence, then in the third step, the moving party must establish with admissible evidence a valid arbitration agreement between the parties. (Ibid.)

IV. Analysis

Defendant's motion contends there are two different arbitration agreements that compel arbitration here: that found in the Owner's Handbook (Goel Decl., Ex. F) and that found in the CSA Terms & Conditions, to which customers purportedly must agree in order to enroll in Bluelink services (Rao Decl. ¶16, Ex. B).

A. Owners Handbook

Hyundai asserts its "2023 Owner's Handbook & Warranty Information" contains an arbitration provision that binds plaintiff to arbitrate. Goel's declaration in support of the motion attaches the handbooks as Exhibit F. According to Goel, the handbook was included in the glovebox of the vehicle plaintiff "leased" because "[i]n California, all vehicles sold at authorized Hyundai dealerships include" the handbook. (Goel Decl., ¶15, Ex. F.) The handbook includes an arbitration agreement on page 12. (Goel Decl., Ex. F, p. 12-15.) While mentioned on page three's Table of Contents, the subheading mentioning arbitration ("BINDING ARBITRATION FOR CALIFORNIA VEHICLES ONLY") is not in bold like the primary headings and unless someone were looking for it, the provision would not be obvious. According to the terms of the arbitration agreement, an owner must affirmatively opt out of the arbitration agreement within 30 days or otherwise be bound. Goel represents that plaintiff did not opt out here and is therefore bound.

Notice is the touchstone for assent to a contract, and in order to establish mutual assent, there must be actual or constructive notice of the agreement. (Marin Storage & Trucking, Inc. v. Benco Contracting & Engineering, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal.App.4th 1042, 1049-1050.) A consumer is "not bound by inconspicuous contractual provisions of which he was unaware, contained in a document whose contractual nature is not obvious." (Sellers v. JustAnswer LLC (2021) 73 Cal.App.5th 444, 461.) "[I]n the absence of actual notice, a manifestation of assent may be inferred from the consumer's actions . . . but any such action must indicate the parties' assent to the same thing, which occurs only when the [provider] puts the consumer on constructive notice of the contractual terms." (Sellers, supra, 73 Cal.App.5th at 461; accord, Herzog v. Superior Court (2024) 101 Cal.App.5th 1280, 1293-1294.)

No such notice has been shown here. In fact, plaintiff's declaration in support of the opposition challenges the existence of an agreement because no one showed plaintiff a copy of the warranty or otherwise informed plaintiff about an arbitration provision in the Owner's Handbook prior to the purchase. Nor did anyone advise plaintiff of the need to opt out of the arbitration provision within 30 days. (Savazian Decl., ¶¶4-5 ["prior to this Motion, I was completely oblivious to the post-sale "Arbitration Agreement" that is buried within the Owner's Handbook and Warranty Information booklet's approximately 50 pages."]) The declaration sufficiently challenges the existence of an agreement such that defendant must present admissible evidence to show such agreement exists.

Instead of providing evidence that would counter plaintiff's alleged lack of notice, Hyundai responds in reply that no evidence is necessary under Condee v. Longwood Management Corp. (2001) 88 Cal.App.4th 215 and the California Rules of Court. While Condee and California Rules of Court, rule 3.1330, decrease the initial burden on a party moving to compel arbitration, the court in Gamboa, supra, 72 Cal.App.5th 158 explained the implications of that rule.

Quoting Ruiz v. Moss Bros. Auto Group, Inc. (2014) 232 Cal.App.4th 836, 846, the court notes that “[p]roperly understood, Condee holds that a petitioner is not required to authenticate an opposing party’s signature on an arbitration agreement as a preliminary matter in moving for arbitration or in the event the authenticity of the signature is not challenged.” (Gamboa, supra, 72 Cal.App.5th at 168.) The Gamboa court goes on to then describe a three-step burden shifting process. If the opposing party disputes the agreement with its own evidence, as plaintiff has done here, “then in the third step, the moving party must establish with admissible evidence a valid arbitration agreement between the parties. The burden of proving the agreement by a preponderance of the evidence remains with the moving party.” (Gamboa, supra, 72 Cal.App.5th at 165-166.)

Neither the document itself, nor any other evidence, indicates delivery to, and acceptance by, plaintiff. While the Goel Declaration is sufficient to establish normal business practices of Hyundai dealerships (to leave the handbook in gloveboxes), Goel does not have any particular insight into what happened in this case. Goel repeatedly refers to plaintiff leasing the vehicle, which is not applicable here. The handbook may have been left in the glovebox, and may be available online at the Hyundai website, but its availability does not equate to plaintiff receiving a copy or knowing to look at the document prior to purchasing the vehicle.

Addressing Hyundai’s argument that equitable estoppel applies, there is a general rule that, “[w]hen a plaintiff brings a claim which relies on contract terms against a defendant, the plaintiff may be equitably estopped from repudiating the arbitration clause contained in that agreement.” (JSM Tuscan, LLC v. Superior Court (2011) 193 Cal.App.4th 1222, 1239.) Here, however, plaintiff expressly denies reliance on the written terms of the warranty that appear in the handbook as the basis for plaintiff’s claims and instead argues the case is brought pursuant to the Song-Beverly Act. Because Hyundai has not definitively shown plaintiff was aware of the arbitration agreement, independent of any general awareness of the broader warranty (knowledge about which might have come through multiple sources), Hyundai fails to demonstrate how equitable estoppel would apply. This alleged lack of receipt/notice was not discussed in the reply papers.

Defendant fails to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that plaintiff agreed to the arbitration provisions contained in the handbook.

B. Blue Link Connected Services Agreement

Hyundai submits the Connected Services Agreement as a second and independent grounds to compel arbitration here. The CSA is attached to the Declaration of Vijay Rao in support of the motion. (Rao Decl., ¶20, Ex. B.) Rao, Hyundai’s Director of Connected Ops & Owner Apps/Web, describes the process by which new Bluelink services enrollees activate the services through the Dealer-Assisted Enrollment process, like plaintiff here. Rao describes the process by which they agree to the then-effective CSA. (Rao Decl., ¶¶4-9, 18.) Using a “dealer-owned device, such as a tablet,” the customer enrolls in Bluelink with assistance from the dealer employee, who first creates an account for the customer and then associates the customer’s purchased car with that account. (Rao Decl., ¶8.) “The dealer then hands over control of the device to the customer to enter their personal details and review the Bluelink Terms and Conditions.” (Id. at ¶¶8-9.) Upon receiving the dealer-owned device, the customer must enter their personal details. They are then presented with a checkbox indicating acceptance of the Bluelink “Terms & Conditions.” The phrase “Terms & Conditions” is underlined and includes a hyperlink to the then-effective CSA in blue font. (Id. at ¶10.) To enroll in Bluelink services, plaintiff would have had to check the box to acknowledge that she “read and agree[d] to the Blue Link Terms & Conditions.” (Id. at ¶11.)

1) Whether Agreement Was Formed

In general, Courts applying California law have routinely found that "clickwrap" agreements may be enforceable under certain circumstances. (Berman v. Freedom Fin. Network, LLC (9th Cir. 2022) 30 F.4th 849, 856.) "Clickwrap" is an agreement "in which an internet user accepts a website's terms of use by clicking an 'I agree' or 'I accept' button, with a link to the agreement readily available." (Sellers, supra, 73 Cal. App. 5th at 463). Because they generally ensure that a contracting party must manifest "knowing consent" through an overt act, clickwrap agreements "are regularly enforced." Such agreements require the user to manifest assent to a website's terms of use by clicking an "I agree" or "I accept" button, with a link to the agreement readily available. (Herzog v. Superior Court (2024) 101 Cal.App.5th 1280, 1296, citing Sellers, supra, 73 Cal.App.5th at 463.)

Plaintiff enrolled the vehicle in Bluelink Services on November 11, 2022. (Rao Decl., ¶7.) This is supported by records from Hyundai's internal database that reflects facts related to plaintiff's enrollment and plaintiff fails to object to this evidence. (Rao Decl., Ex. A.) Plaintiff does not submit any evidence to dispute the authenticity of the CSA, or deny having assented to it.

The CSA contains a "Binding Arbitration" provision within subpart C. of Section 14, entitled "Resolving Disputes." This subpart C. includes the following within the section entitled "Arbitration Agreement":

Hyundai and you agree to arbitrate any and all disputes and claims between us arising out of or relating to this Agreement, Connected Services, ... the Vehicle, ... except any disputes or claims which under governing law are not subject to arbitration, to the maximum extent permitted by applicable law. ... This agreement to arbitrate is intended to be broadly interpreted and to make all disputes and claims between us subject to arbitration to the fullest extent permitted by law.

The evidence presented establishes, by a preponderance of the evidence, that plaintiff assented to the terms of the clickwrap CSA.

Plaintiff argues the scope of the arbitration agreement is limited, not covering the dispute here. "Whether parties have agreed to submit a particular dispute to arbitration is typically an issue for judicial determination. Where the dispute at issue concerns contract formation, the dispute is generally for courts to decide." (Moritz v. Universal City Studios LLC (2020) 54 Cal.App.5th 238, 246, citations omitted.) The CSA in which the arbitration agreement is contained generally relates to a vehicle owner's Bluelink services subscription and not the purchase of the vehicle. The Opposition points out that the CSA distinguishes between the "Connected Services" discussed in the CSA and other issues that are covered by the express warranty. (See Rao Decl., Ex. B at Section 10 ["THE VEHICLE'S LIMITED WARRANTY does not cover the Connected Services. . .".])

The second paragraph on the first page of the "Connected Services Agreement" expressly defines "Connected Services" as "the vehicle technology and service functions received as part of the enrollment in a Bluelink or Genesis Connected Services Service Plan, including but not limited to Remote Service Activation, Stolen Vehicle Recovery, Enhanced Roadside Assistance, SOS/ACN, POI Send-to-Car and Destination Search, Digital Key 2.0, Verizon Hotspot, [and] Over the Air software updates." (Rao Decl., Ex. B, p. 1.) The CSA and its arbitration provisions do not extend to the claims made here, which relate to "electrical, structural, engine, emission, and suspension system defects." (Complaint, ¶10.)

Even if the Court were to conclude that the Bluelink arbitration agreement included the Song-

Beverly claims at issue here, plaintiff shows a valid defense because the provision is unconscionable, as discussed below.

2) Unconscionability

Plaintiff bears the burden to show that the arbitration agreement in the CSA is unconscionable. (OTO, L.L.C. v. Kho (2019) 8 Cal.5th 111, 126.) A contract is unconscionable if one of the parties lacked a meaningful choice in deciding whether to agree and the contract contains terms that are unreasonably favorable to the other party. (Id. at 125.) To prevail on an unconscionability defense, a party must establish both a procedural element and a substantive element. (Ibid.) The procedural element addresses the circumstances of contract negotiation and formation, focusing on oppression or surprise due to unequal bargaining power. (Ibid.) Substantive unconscionability pertains to the fairness of an agreement's actual terms and to assessments of whether they are overly harsh or one-sided. (Ibid.)

a) Procedural Unconscionability

As to procedural unconscionability, plaintiff presents little evidence as to the negotiation and formation of the contract (plaintiffs indicate the dealer representative said the vehicle was “already warranted under Defendant’s express warranty”), but Hyundai’s own evidence is on point. The Rao declaration describes a process whereby plaintiff agreed to the CSA in the presence of a dealer employee on a device that was likely handheld, under circumstances that do not appear likely to have provided the “ample opportunity” for review mentioned by Rao. (Rao Decl., ¶¶8-12.) Plaintiff was required to review over ten pages of small print, likely on a small screen, in order to view the arbitration clause here. The title of the CSA suggests its scope only pertains to the tech services, but in fact covers the entire vehicle. These circumstances demonstrate surprise.

Further, the CSA is a classic adhesion contract since plaintiff would have had little to no opportunity to negotiate the terms. Rao states that “many customers” instead “choose to deny acceptance.” The consumer must merely click a check box next to the following statement: “I have read and agree to the Blue Link Terms & Conditions.” (Rao Decl., ¶¶10-11, Ex. C.) The statement does not suggest the enrollee is agreeing to arbitrate disputes arising from the vehicle warranty.

Finally, the arbitration provisions, purportedly covering all disputes stemming from the warranty or the CSA, are near the end of the agreement, which is over 10 pages long.

Based on the adhesive nature of the agreement and element of surprise arising from the expansive scope of the contract, the CSA is highly procedurally unconscionable. The high degree of procedural unconscionability leads to a lower standard for substantive unconscionability for the Court to deny enforcement. This element is examined below.

b) Substantive Unconscionability

In support of the substantive unconscionability argument, plaintiff’s opposition points to terms that would purportedly contradict the Song Beverly Act’s asymmetrical attorneys’ fee recovery provisions, which favor plaintiffs. Plaintiff also notes the arbitration agreement’s shortened statute of limitations which requires “ANY CLAIM AGAINST HYUNDAI OR GENESIS (OR ANY OTHER THIRD PARTY BENEFICIARY)” to be brought within “ONE YEAR AFTER THE CLAIM ARISES.”

Hyundai, in its reply, minimizes any effect of the phrasing that would eliminate the Song-Beverly’s allowance for asymmetrical attorney fee recovery. Hyundai also attempts to distinguish the cases cited by plaintiff relating to shortened statutes of limitations.

As to fees, while Hyundai does not view the issue as particularly problematic, the Court notes the CSA limits Hyundai's liability to $500 or the total amount paid for connected services during the 12 months preceding a claim, "UNDER ANY THEORY (INCLUDING BUT NOT LIMITED TO FRAUD, MISREPRESENTATION, BREACH OF CONTRACT, PERSONAL INJURY, OR PRODUCTS LIABILITY)." (Rao Decl., Ex. B, ¶11E ["THE MAXIMUM AGGREGATE LIABILITY OF HYUNDAI"].) The fee provision, as well as the aforementioned limitation on liability, are substantively unconscionable in this context.

As to the statute of limitations, the Court finds plaintiff's authorities persuasive. In Fisher v. MoneyGram International, Inc. (2021) 66 Cal.App.5th 1084, the appellate court held that a provision reducing a four-year statute of limitations to one-year was substantively unconscionable. Song-Beverly Act warranty claims are subject to a four-year statute of limitations. (Krieger v. Nick Alexander Imports, Inc. (1991) 234 Cal.App.3d 205, 213-215.) Shortening the limitations period to one year significantly limits the period to bring claims. Thus, the facts here are analogous to the facts at issue in Fisher.

Further, in Gostev v. Skillz Platform, Inc. (2023) 88 Cal.App.5th 1035, the court pointed to several nonmutual terms, "including, most notably, the requirement that only the plaintiff arbitrate his claims against the defendant, in its determination that the agreement was substantively unconscionable." The comparison is apt. Here, the CSA only limits Hyundai's monetary liability and only limits the time limits on claims brought by plaintiff.

Both the shortened one-year statute of limitations provision, as well as the fee recovery provisions and one-sided limitation on liability cause the CSA to be permeated by substantively unconscionable terms.

Accordingly, the CSA's arbitration agreement is unconscionable and incapable of severance.
