Case Number: 24SMCV02013 Hearing Date: July 17, 2026 Dept: I

The court is unsure why this is not something that could be accomplished through regular discovery.

Is the theory that it is not even reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence—even as to the amount of any claimed relief? The court would hope so. But if it just is not relevant to anything other than compliance with the preliminary injunction, then the court is disinclined to start forcing people to give depositions or produce other documents. Further, the preliminary injunction serves no purpose because there is no injury without it, then the court needs to reconsider whether the preliminary injunction makes sense.
