25VECV02943 Rodriguez v Honda

This is a continuance of a motion in which the court allowed plaintiff to produce his declaration. He has and it does not comply with the order. He did not explaining the entirety of his schedule for the next 30 days, and when did he advise plaintiff's counsel of his availability or lack thereof, as well as a declaration from him and counsel as to why he was not produced for deposition, and why he cannot be produced for deposition wherever he happens to be now.

"The court will advance the hearing on the motion to continue. Be advised that if this motion is heard, the court will require a declaration from Mr. Bounds explaining the entirety of his schedule for the next 30 days, and when did he advise plaintiff's counsel of his availability or lack thereof, as well as a declaration from him and counsel as to why he was not produced for deposition, and why he cannot be produced for deposition wherever he happens to be now. Without a declaration setting forth these matters, the case will not be continued."

Who did the plaintiff designate as an expert. Many times they designate more than once. If this expert is not available, pick someone else and ask the court for relief.

Lemon Law cases are not special and they need to follow the rules just like everyone else, Find other experts rather than same people over and over again.
