

		relief. To put it another way, no action for declaratory relief would ever be ripe if it must be adjudicated in the present because adjudication always occurs in the future. Defendants also assert these claims fail because their position is correct and they will prevail at trial. However, whether Defendants ultimately prevail at trial on their defenses has no bearing on whether a declaratory relief claim is ripe for adjudication as pleaded in the complaint. Accordingly, the Demurrers on this ground are OVERRULED. Plaintiff to give notice. The parties and/or their counsel shall appear for the trial setting status conference.
