Tentative Ruling:

APPEARANCE OPTIONAL

The Court has reviewed the objection to its previous tentative ruling of July 13, 2026. The Court does not find it persuasive. The objection asserts that, at the March hearing, this court found that the Conservator was acting in the Conservatee's best interest. The Court made no such finding. The court stated that the hourly rate was reasonable and that the Conservator was dedicated to the well-being of the Conservatee, but that is a far cry from making any finding that he was acting in her best interest. Having a reasonable hourly rate does not forgo the possibility that said hourly rate is being over-applied, as it appears it is from what the court has reviewed. The fact that the court, in previous years, has approved accountings in no way influences what this court sees in its review for the present accounting. The objection correctly identifies an error in the previous TR, however, which appears to be a typographical error. The court stands corrected that Conservator is seeking payment of $101,050, not $111,050. This matter will be continued so that the court investigator's office can have sufficient time to review again the Conservator's billings in light of the concerns raised by the court and the information provided in Conservator's most recent filing/objection. The Court Investigator shall file a report documenting its findings and making any recommendations it believes is warranted based upon its review. The Court re-appoints Julia Lyngis as independent counsel for the Conservatee. In the interim, the Conservator is ordered not to utilize any personal credit card or personal funds for the purchase of any necessities or incidentals for the Conservatee. The matter is continued to October 29, 2026 at 9:00 a.m.
