

All Plaintiff asserts is that Plaintiff's counsel's firm and FCA "routinely litigate" SBA actions against each other, and Plaintiff has observed varying and inconsistent productions by FCA across these numerous Song-Beverly cases, raising legitimate questions as to whether FCA's search, retention, and preservation practices are being applied consistently in every case, including this one. Thus, Plaintiff is using its second set of discovery in this case to establish a pattern and practice by FCA of routinely providing inadequate or incomplete discovery responses/responsive documents in all cases FCA is defending. Plaintiff cites no authority to use discovery in this case for that broader purpose. As a result, the "discovery on discovery" objection is well-taken and must be sustained. As a consequence, the objections on grounds of overly broad and lack of relevance are also well-taken, and are sustained. Thus, no further responses are required.
